The farm has provided us with the greatest childhood memories that a boy or girl in Mississippi could have. Summers were spent by the pond with grandparents as they taught us how to bait a hook, only to have to do it a thousand more times as we continually lost the bait. Plenty of fish were caught and even one that would go down in history as the big cat that got grandaddy to jump into the water to reel it in.

Camping with friends near the pond and kayaking were a favorite as we got older. Chasing the geese and searching for turtles, frogs, and minnows were cherished activities. Wild blackberries grew aplenty and made for delicious jams. The fourth of July was a major holiday. We would have so many family and friends come out to smoke ribs, make homemade ice cream, play horseshoes, ride horses, ride ATVs, and shoot fireworks.

The fall and winter months brought about different activities.
Hunting was the favorite pastime of the menfolk. A wild turkey served as our Thanksgiving meal (basted in wild turkey whiskey, of course) and made us feel as if we were truly able to live off the land. Deer sausage and meat stocked our freezers, along with vegetables from the garden of spring and summer.

All of the bids learned to drive out at the farm. The most

All of the kids learned to drive out at the farm. The most unexpectedly humorous moments came from getting some vehicle and embarrassed driver out of the mud. My father spent most of his life working in Jackson and always loved coming home to his paradise. We spent many evenings on the back porch watching the wind blow the waves of the pond and listening for the summer thunderstorms. It is a place of peace and respite from what has become an increasingly hectic world. We always loved it and hope that you will too.
